

ABSTRACT

A noninvasive optical device for redirecting incoming light rays comprising a distant image scene being received by a human system prior to impinging on an optical entrance pupil of the human vision system. The device effects a precise repositioning of all incoming light rays of an image scene and provides identical image repositioning to both eyes of the human vision system to ensure binocular accommodation.